

EFFICIENT AS YOUR BUSINESS

ROLL-ON PAINTING works after-hours to keep your office on track

A quiet fall has its advantages. Now that the bustle of tourist traffic has subsided, it's finally time to think about showing your workspace a little TLC. But just because it's quiet doesn't mean your office can afford to be out of commission.

"It would be unreasonable to expect a business to take a week off or work from home," says Chad Gilchrist, owner of Roll-On Painting. "It's just not efficient."

Roll-On Painting has been working with businesses for over 24 years to freshen offices, storefronts or industrial spaces. When it comes to commercial work, they suggest scheduling painting projects to be done during off-hours when no one will be using the space.

"We work evenings and weekends, and basically any time that is convenient for the business owner," says Chad. "It is much easier for the business to have the prep work and painting done when no one is around."

Their team also takes the time to protect the surrounding area to eliminate worries and possible headaches. "We care about the details. That's why we clean as we go and cover everything."

"We work evenings and weekends, and basically any time that is convenient for the business owner."

When choosing a paint company, Chad suggests going with one that has the equipment, training and experience to meet your building's needs. "Fifty per cent of our business is commercial, so we have the tools and equipment needed for any environment," says Chad.

The goal, says Chad, is to make your space look great without disrupting your business.
